Sometimes work does not always go to plan. Priorities can change, new information comes in and sometimes the approach that worked yesterday will not work today. Agile Thinking is about being able to adjust without getting thrown off course. “Unlearning” is very popular at the moment too enabling participants to let go of old habits and ways of working that are no longer useful. This course helps participants become more flexible in how they approach problems, make decisions and respond when things change. Participants discover tools to look at a situation differently and try another approach. One of the modern challenges to creative thinking is outsourcing to AI. Bland solutions will overtake creative thinking as the default. The course also covers how to keep moving when you don’t have all the answers and how to make sensible decisions when surrounded with uncertainty. Managing change is a popular module. Managers and staff continually overestimate their change management skills.
